As #ISIS claimed the London attack, a set of interesting accounts emerged. All handles started “fans of,” then insert Salafi-jihadist ideologue. Here’s the first, Abu Nour Maqdisi, who declared an “Islamic Emirate” in Gaza on Aug 14, 2009 and was killed on August 15. Thread.

2. Abu Nour Maqdisi founded Jund Ansar Allah, which “promoted an ideology following Osama bin Laden, posting his statements as well as terrorist training videos on its website,” and came into direct confrontation with Hamas and lost.

3. Here's Ali al Anbari, killed in 2016, second in command to Abu Bakr al Baghdadi, and head of #ISIS treasury. He was supposedly an ardent opponent of the Ba'ath regime, stories about a childhood incident where he does not clap for Saddam are considered by experts as fantasy.

4. Here's Abu Bakr al Qahtani, killed in 2016. He was an #ISIS Sharia jurist who supposedly took on the extreme faction of the terrorist group, and attempted to "calm them down," as one expert said. Was incredibly influential. Died with the mantle "Shaykh al Mujahid."

5. Here's Turki Banali, a Bahraini, and buddies with al Qahtani. He was important in a number regards. He was head of the research and studies for #ISIS. He is known for sanctioning turning "infidel women" into "sex slaves," and generally heinous religious opinions.

6. Here's Abu Malik al Tamimi, a #ISIS Sharia jurist killed in 2015. He was groomed for the Saudi Ministry of Justice, but went to Afghanistan in 2009 to fight instead. Was No. 3 on Saudi's most wanted list in 2011. Was a key ideologue in a video mass killing of 30 Ethiopians.

7. Overall, a number of key shaykhs linked to #ISIS and #AQ in some form. Interesting to note, this set of accounts, appeared specifically to tweet out the London al Amaq claim. Also, they are all “martyrs.” This suggests a narrative of tying the past “martyrs” with the present.
